WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

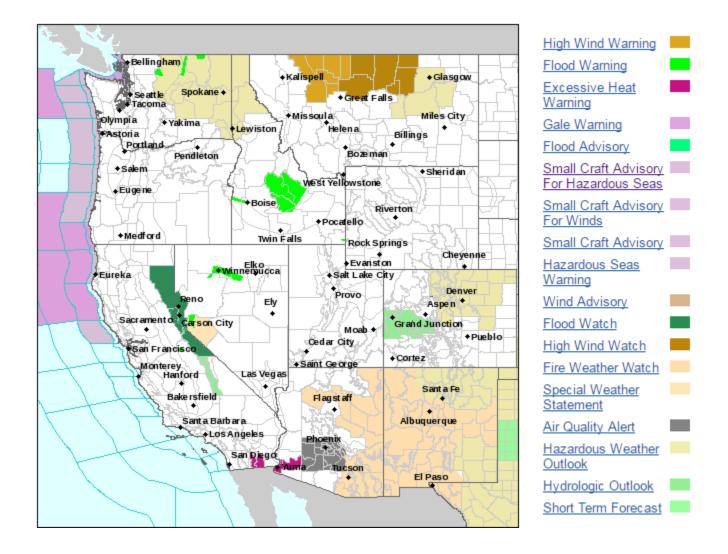

Strong high pressure will be over the region for a few days before slightly weakening. Afternoon max temps through Tuesday will be just a few degrees over 100 in the warmest inland areas with plenty of other lower elevation inland areas in the mid and upper 90s. Afternoon minimum relative humidity will also be reasonably low today and Tuesday in those areas and winds will be light. The high may weaken a little Tuesday, but Wednesday a trough moving through the Pacific NW will definitely weaken it. That will open the door for a few afternoon cumulus buildups over the northern and eastern mountains with a small chance of a few late afternoon and evening thunderstorms Tuesday, but mainly Wednesday. More late afternoon and evening mountain thunderstorms may become possible Thursday through Sunday, but right now, confidence of that happening is lowest for Thursday and Sunday. The coolest day this week is likely to be Friday with the warmest inland areas dropping into the mid 80s. Some gusty W winds are likely to develop through the Delta Wednesday afternoon with southerly winds picking up but not becoming all that strong over much of Siskiyou and Modoc Counties Wednesday. Otherwise areas of gusty afternoon westerly winds will be in place Thursday through the weekend. A trough will be approaching the coast early next week for a cool down and possibly a bit of mountain precipitation.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

There will be little change in the weather through Tuesday as a strong ridge of high pressure sits over California. Maximum temperatures will be well above normal, with upper 70s and 80s across the mountains and 90s to 102 in the valleys. Minimum humidity will be mainly between 12% and 25% away from the coastal areas. Winds will be light, except for when the sea breeze of 10 to 20 mph pushes inland during the afternoons. The ridge will weaken as a Pacific trough drops down the West Coast bringing 5 to 10 degrees of cooling Wednesday. A little instability will allow for a chance of isolated afternoon thunderstorms over the Sierra Crest through Wednesday. The Pacific trough will bring a little below normal temperatures and higher humidity to the region Thursday and Friday. Westerly winds of 20 to 30 mph with gusts to 50 mph will surface across the wind prone mountain and desert areas Wednesday afternoon through the end of this week. Another ridge of high pressure will build northward out of Mexico bringing warming and drying to the area this weekend.
